

work out two versions of the future for Lake James, said Mozley, who has years of success with environmentally sound development projects.

One of those Crescent projects, Palmetto Bluff, in the low country of South Carolina, was crafted from a plan guided by the land rather than a "development template" to make the best use of topography and wetlands according to the development's Web site.

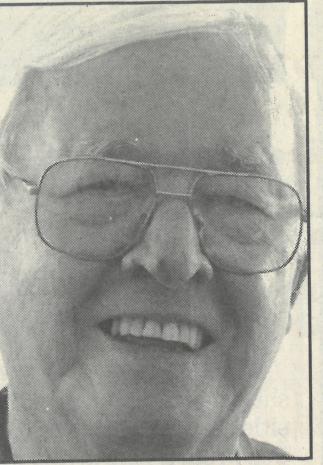

"There were two plans," Mozley said. "One with and one without a park."

Actually, the plan without the park was approved in early May by the Burke County planning board and the Burke County Board of Commissioners.

Given this kind of vision as a mod-
